Inventor of "Square Sets" Dies In San Francisco at Advanced Age

Poor, old, almost forgotten, but hopeful to the last that his mining claims would restore his lost fortunes, Philip Deidesheimer is dead at his home, 2808 Clay street, San Francisco. His devoted wife was with him to the end. Death came through infirmities due to his advanced age, 84 years.

Philip Deidesheimer invented the "square set" used in timbering wide veins. He never patented it. By the use of the "square set" it became possible to extract the ore with safety in the wide and rich veins of the Comstock lode.

Because Philip Deidesheimer showed the way, the fortunes of Mackey, Fair, Flood, O'Brien, Baldwin, Sharon, the Sherwoods, "Sandy" Bowers, Morrow and others came into being.

The "square set" is used all over the world today where veins exist. Without it the mining of these wide veins is all but impossible. Deidesheimer's original idea, which came to him in 1860, has never been improved upon.

What Philip Deidesheimer did when confronted with the problem of taking ore out of a 65-foot vein and prevent the walls from caving in was to fill the vacant space after the ore was taken out with skeleton boxes about six feet square. After the ore was out the space was filled with these timbers, like a honeycomb. Later waste was thrown in.

Deidesheimer was a famous mining engineer and expert in his day.

He not only solved the problem of getting out the big bonanzas of the Comstock lode, but he was the first engineer to report on the project to bring water from Lake Tahoe to San Francisco. In his day the estimate was $17,000,000.

Deidesheimer made three or four fortunes. He finally lost because like many another old-timer, he stuck to a few of his early friends.

Deidesheimer's life reads like a romance. Born in Germany in 1832, he came to the United States in 1851, after taking a technical course in the old country. He came to California in 1852 on the steamer Cortez, through the Straits of Magellan, and immediately on his arrival went to Forest Hill, operating a drift mine, which paid for years.

Later he bought a claim which developed into the profitable "Marmaduke" mine near George town.

In November, 1860, W. F. Babcock, principal owner of the Ophir mine on the Comstock, who had heard of his skill in controlling difficult situations, asked him to come to San Francisco for a conference. It was explained to him that the vein of the Ophir was sixty-five feet wide, the walls crumbling and soft, and the owners feared they would never be able to get out the ore, due to caving.

Deidesheimer went to Virginia City and after three weeks' study evolved the "square set."

Montana claimed Deidesheimer in 1866. For a St. Louis company he took charge of a smelter at Argentina. He bought a prospect on Flint creek for these people, and it developed

In 1871 he recommended to M. Castle and his associates in the Ophir that they buy the California on the Comstock, for $42,500. They declined. Subsequently James C. Flood bought it for $85,000. It later produced untold millions.

Deidesheimer gained control of the Ophir in 1871 and made some money. In speculating in the Comstocks in 1874 he made a fortune, which was swept away early in 1875.

In recent years he has not done well. His achievements were forgotten. The fire of 1906 swept away his remaining property and he died in poverty.

Alf Chartz On Registration

EDITOR APPEAL: I find the following in Friday evening's Appeal: "Register! Only nine days more in which to register in order that you may vote at the August primaries. Those who registered two years ago will have to register again if they wish to vote at the primary or general election. The attorney general has rendered an opinion to that effect. Those that registered for the May election of this year will not have to again register. The time is growing short and Registry Agent King requests voters to call at his office and register at once."

I find the following in the primary election law of 1915: "Said register shall be made by taking the names of all the voters on the register used at the last general election in the city, precinct or county, together with supplemental registers of additions showing all additional registration. Changes and corrections made since the last general registration."

The last general election was held in 1914. By the above, the register is commanded to transfer on his register all the names of those who registered in 1914, and in addition thereto all new registrations made this year to the date of the close of registration for the primary election, and this will constitute the entire list of all entitled to vote at the primary. In other words, those who registered for the general election of 1914 don't need to register again in order to be entitled to vote at the primaries, but will have to register again in order to vote at the ensuing general election, and all those who registered in time to vote at the primaries will not need to register again in order to vote at the general election.

Section 12, which provides for the registration of voters at general elections, commands registry agents to receive registrations up to the 20th of October of the even numbered years. So, in order to vote at the general election, one can register at any time up to the 20th of October.

Broke His Parole; Must Serve Term

Sheriff Charles Slavin of Nye county was among the arrivals on the train last evening from the south. He had in charge Frank Smith, a prisoner who was convicted of grand larceny some time ago and sentenced to serve a term of from one to fifteen years in the state prison. The judge suspended the sentence pending good behavior, but Smith violated his parole and was taken into custody by Sheriff Slavin and placed in the state prison last evening to serve his sentence.

However, primary elections are fully as important as general elections, and all who desire to perform their civic duty should register now and exercise their franchise at the primaries. At the primaries we appoint our agents and grant them a power of attorney to act for us and in our behalf. You would not appoint an irresponsible to act as your agent, with power to convey land, and you should not appoint such person, or permit such person to be appointed to act as agent with power of attorney to dispose of your civic and public interests. Don't be a hyphenate or a miserable neutral in your civic life.

ALFRED CHARTZ,
